This study uses African sacred cultures and cosmologies as a framework with which to reveal more about enslaved black women's participation in organized resistance. The Akan diaspora in the Americas provides a uniquely fruitful case study, due to the fact that pre-colonial Akan culture is matrilineal, and in many regards, matrifocal. Enslaved Akan women's roles in resistance are compared with those played by women of other and intermingled African ethnicities.

Perhaps the single most telling moment of the 1890s for black citizens was the Supreme Court's decision that segregated public facilities did not violate the Constitution. Why a "telling moment?" Because it said to African Americans "you're on your own." The federal government would not enforce integration, just as it would not pass an anti-lynching law or, later, maintain integrated federal ...

The prize will be adjudicated by the editors of the Journal of Modern African Studies. The prize is named in honour David and Helen Kimble who co-founded the journal in 1963. David, who went on to edit the journal for 35 years, passed away in 2009; Helen, who is now in her nineties, still takes an active interest in African affairs. We are delighted to announce that the winner for 2019 is ...
